Endotext.org is the web-based source of information on endocrine disease directed to physicians around the world caring for patients with these problems, and is organized by Leslie J De Groot, MD, twelve Section Editors, and nearly 400 Authors.. It is comprehensive, authoritative, constantly up-dated (last update 17 Oct 2012), un-biased, and available without cost to physicians and trainees. All material may be freely downloaded for personal use. This site covers the broad area of Clinical Endocrinology, emphasizing clinical endocrine practice, including the most current information on the manifestations of endocrine disease, diagnosis and treatment. Endotext.org is the premier provider of well reviewed and organized clinical endocrine information on the Web. Endotext.org is solely responsible for all content. Our site is made available through the fantastic generosity of the authors and editors who have provided their articles as a service to the profession. Vicente Cano is our Webmaster, and Henry De Groot, MD is our Internet Technology Consultant. We are supported in part by Unrestricted Educational Grants from pharmaceutical companies, and we are grateful to SANOFI and IPSEN for helping make our educational website available to Endocrinologists world-wide. We also have several non-intrusive ads with hyperlinks to pharmaceutical company sites providing product information. For all questions on our site, advertising, and information, email <ldegroot@earthlink.net>. Copyright © 2000-2013, MDText.com, Inc. All rights reserved.
